

Adam Carr, Public Access and BLM

Adam is the Western Field Director for the Bureau of Land Management (BLM). He has worked for the BLM for over 20 years with most of that time in Montana. He and his wife came to Montana in 1999 from Wyoming where Adam had graduated from the University of Wyoming. He has held numerous positions prior to taking on the challenge of the Public Lands Access Coordinator. Adam's previous positions include Rangeland Management Specialist, Supervisory Natural Resource Specialist, Field Manager and Branch Chief in locations including Miles City, Lewistown and Billings, Montana and Fairbanks, Alaska. Adam has recreated on public lands throughout his life as his parents exposed both he and his brother to many outdoor activities while growing up in the Black Hills of South Dakota. Adam is passionate about public lands access and management and currently spends outdoor recreation time with my wife, daughter and friends hiking, hunting, skiing, fly fishing and mountain biking in Central Montana.
