

Jake Jourdonnais is a lifelong hunter with a bit of an obsession for long range shooting and the associated ballistics. Born in Choteau, growing up in Helena, and now residing in Bozeman, he is a native Montanan. He spent 4 years in the US Marine Corps from 2005-2009 and has since been working overseas as an independent defense contractor.

Jake has been into long range marksmanship for about 10 years. It started when he discovered the need for longer range ethical shot placement on game in any and all terrain and weather. Jake completed the Dept of Defense's precision weapons course in 2018 as well as Gunwerks long range hunting course in 2019. In doing so he realized just how important the application of ballistics are to every rifle caliber and cartridge available today.

Hunting is at the core of who Jake is and he believes in putting more ethical, educated, and happy freezer fillers in the field. He is a member of the Wild Sheep Foundation, Goat Alliance, RMEF, and the Mule Deer Foundation.
